

THE BROODY HEN

Cask investment & private casks

Your own story, beginning with one cask.

Discover The Broody Hen approach to cask sourcing, oak maturation and whisky finishing.

An edited English edition, prepared in October 2026 from the supplied six-page Cask Investment Brochure. The source is held in the 2022 archive and does not describe current sale terms.

Capital, returns and buybacks are not guaranteed. Photographs, labels and the export map are historical reference material from the source brochure.

Who we are

Where art and craftsmanship meet in Edinburgh.

The source brochure describes the opening of Summerhall Distillery and launch of Pickering's Gin in 2013, presenting it as Edinburgh's first dedicated gin distillery in over 150 years. This is the historical account in the supplied material.

From 2015, the team sourced casks for limited-edition oak-aged gin, exploring finishes using casks from four Scotch whisky regions: the Highlands, Islands, Lowlands and Islay. The search for the right casks led into the Scottish Highlands, where five casks stacked like a hen coop stood out among rows of barrels.

The distillery sits within the historic Summerhall arts venue: a community of independent galleries, workshops, theatres and studios, alongside a pub, brewery and hand-built distillery.

In the review quoted by the original brochure, The Stage described a village-like community offering comfort and a sense of belonging amid the bustle (August 2017).

The history, activities and review are source-era accounts. Please confirm current venue operations and product availability separately.

Choosing oak, shaping character

Maturation develops aroma, texture and colour.

Selecting an oak cask is a defining part of creating an expression of The Broody Hen Scotch Whisky. Maturation in oak bourbon casks develops distinctive aromas, textures and colours within a complex flavour profile.

The team worked with Scottish distilleries to source fine casks. For The Broody Hen Blended Scotch Whisky, the aim was a distinctive sweet, smooth profile with a touch of spice, carefully developed through the whisky-making process.

According to the source brochure, the first release of The Broody Hen Blended Scotch Whisky was matured in American oak casks, including first-fill and second-fill bourbon casks.

First-fill and second-fill describe a cask's usage history, not the whisky's age or a ranking of quality.

A brand reaching the world

An archive of the source brochure's export story.

The original brochure introduced its international expansion with the heading 'A Vastly Expanding Brand / Exporting across the world' and the map shown here.

The markers preserve the source artwork. They are not a current list of sales territories, exclusive distribution rights, stock or shop locations. Please enquire about present supply regions and terms.

Finishing: the next maturation

An illustrative finishing period: 6-24 months

Different casks can be sourced to finish a whisky to a preferred style. The original brochure gives 6-24 months as a typical finishing period and describes choosing the length of a second maturation. Actual timing and terms must be confirmed in a current written proposal after assessing the spirit and cask.

A variety of cask types can be used for secondary maturation. The following are representative finishing examples from the source brochure.

Armagnac cask finish

Gascony in south-west France is known for its gentle terroir and Armagnac production. The brochure describes an Armagnac cask finish as bringing a rich, distinctive combination of caramel, fruit, smoky wood and sweet vanilla.

6-24 months is a finishing example, not an investment payback period or total age statement. Flavour notes are sensory descriptions, not added ingredients or a guarantee for every cask.

Two further expressions of oak

Shiraz and sherry finishing examples.

Shiraz cask finish

Rich blackberry, waffle cone and toasted pecan on the nose. Ripe plum on the palate, with cloves, warm spices and charred oak.

Sherry cask finish

One of whisky's widely used finishing styles. The source describes a complex, intense nose, rich nuttiness, sherry-soaked citrus and a warm, sweet impression.

Cask numbers, bottling dates, strength, volume and bottle numbers shown on the pictured labels are historical examples. They do not describe current specifications, stock or financial returns.

The source sherry description ends incompletely; only its readable meaning is included. The labels within the photographs remain unchanged.

Before you choose a cask

Please distinguish source content from the editorial guidance below.

Cask values can fall and resale opportunities are uncertain. Spirit volume also falls through evaporation during maturation. Capital, returns and buybacks are not guaranteed.

Before signing, confirm in writing the cask's identity, transfer of ownership and warehouse acknowledgement; storage, insurance, bottling, transport and tax costs; and any restrictions on disposal, movement or use of brand names. Seek independent advice where appropriate.

A short glossary

Cask: a vessel used for maturation; check whether it contains spirit or is empty.

Finishing: additional maturation in a different cask.

Single cask: whisky bottled from one cask.

Cask strength: generally, bottling without adding water to reduce the strength after maturation. It is not the same as single cask.

This is an edited edition of the supplied brochure, not a newly issued headquarters original, personal investment advice or a sale contract. Rights in the original photographs and logos remain with their respective owners.
